R. Douglas Hurt was Professor and Director of the Graduate Program in Agricultural History and Rural Studies at Iowa State University in Ames and is now Head of the History Department at Purdue University. He is the author or editor of numerous books, including African American Life in the Rural South, 1900-1950 and Agriculture and Slavery in Missouri's Little Dixie. --This text refers to the Paperback edition.

I happened upon this book while doing research for an environmental studies thesis. I was so impressed with the text that I picked up a copy for my personal library. It is interesting to note how strongly a country's agricultural system is tied to the political process, and how agricultural products make such an impact on the global economy (and therefore status of the producing nation).

Best one volume history of American agriculture by dean of American agricultural historians; much superior to Danbom, Born in the County, which attempts a similar brief summary. Good bibliographies of additional readings. Although America was primarily an agricultural county for 250 years, most conventional histories ignore this fact. This book supply an essential missing dimensions, although the reader still has to do a good deal of work to relate it to political, cultural, and economic history that was going on at the same time.

Thanks

My wife bought this book for one of my college classes at Eastern New Mexico University and we need this book.
