After all, dieting for blood type truly is a journey - a journey of the spirit, body and mind. It is logical that you prepare for a passage before taking that first step. Following are some preparatory tips to get you on your way: 1 - Knowing his or her blood type Knowing your blood type is a vital parts of the equation that everyone looking to diet for blood type should do. If you are already accustomed to knowing your blood type then, when it comes to the time to eat only meals that are right for a blood type diet, this will already be second nature which is what is ideally needed. 2 - Eating right One of the biggest missteps that people make when it comes to preparing to diet for blood type is falling short on this vital tip. If you do not consciously observe eating right, it will be difficult to succeed in your goals. That is how your success is dependent on eating right. If you are doubt how to eat right is without reservation is a major activity anybody needs do to make any success of any diet programme then, get your copy today because we will explore more of that in this book! As you can see, dieting for blood type involves a little bit more than just getting out of bed one day to say, "hey, I totally want to diet for blood type." Maybe that can be a great first step, however in order to really gain any level of success when it comes to dieting for blood type, you must prepare and enable yourself to blossom through the preparations. And, Dr.Peter J. D'Adamo in his land mark book 'Eat Right 4 your Type' sees the missing link in the four basic blood groups we discussed in this book. And, in his submission, he made known that type O's are the most likely to suffer from Asthma, hay fever and other allergies. The type B's are the types that resist response to allergies most but are only found to respond when they eat the wrong food that triggers their threshold! Yes, they are susceptible to chronic fatigue, multiple sclerosis, including lupus and autoimmune disorder. Though, the type AB's have little tendencies to allergies, they have their own share of troubles, in that they are found to be of risk of suffering from anemia, cancer and even heart disease. However, he found that type O's are the main sufferers of arthritis, which is as a result of their immune system that are not tolerant to most changes in their environment. This happens when they eat foods that produce inflammatory reactions in their joint. Finally on this are the type A and B that are noted to be susceptible to diabetes, have a higher rate of cancer and are most likely not to survive them in comparison to other types discussed above.
