Beautifully designed publication that celebrates small projects and small architecture firms. It includes a thoughtful article by Nader Tehrani that reflects on the beginnings of a small practice. The 2015 Small Project Awards highlight beautiful small projects from across the nation. I'm anxiously awaiting publication of the 2016 Review to see what's next in small design.

This annual review is beautifully produced and highlights the work of many talented small project architects. Worth a look to find out the state of the art of small projects around the country.

This publication provides a great introduction for small project practitioners and the valuable work they've done at home and beyond. Especially the 'perspective' section gives a compelling insight into how a fellow SPP got their first start. I believe subsequent publication could benefit from a bit more in-depth discussion of the awarded projects; perhaps a brief commentary from the recipient could be interesting. Definitely an effective way for burgeoning small practitioners to get the necessary exposure. Looking forward to the next one!

What an awesome find. A great review of the work of Small Architects. Gorgeous images and amazing work by some of the un-celebrated heroes of American architecture. It was also great to see all of the hard work that the AIA SPP volunteer group puts in every year. Well done!

A beautifully done magazine that highlights the work of small firms. Nader Tehran wrote an insightful article that described the moments in his early career that gave opportunities to his small architecture practice to re-examine design ideas.
