Jacky Davis co-writes the Ladybug Girl series with her husband, David Soman, who also illustrates the books. She lives with her husband and two kids in upstate New York. Jay Fleck's design and illustration work is inspired by his childhood and his experiences with his two young children. His artwork is popular on Threadless.com and has been featured on Gap products and on the front page of Society6.com.

Black Belt Bunny is reeeeeeeally fast, incredibly strong, and a great ninja! He chops, kicks and does backflips, but his biggest challenge is making a salad. This book is hilarious as bunny tries to hide and even put on a disguise to avoid making a salad. Once bunny discovers he can use his ninja skills to cut vegetables, he learns to create a delicious salad. We loved the illustrations, and the entertaining sounds of bunny's karate moves. The interaction between the narrator and the bunny brought us right into this amusing story. We loved seeing bunny use his talents to develop a new skill and to try something new. This book is silly and a lot of fun for children and aspiring ninjas.

I needed a kid's book as a gift and was about to go for my usual-- one of the Ladybug Girl books from the beautiful series by Jacky Davis and David Soman. But then I came across Jacky's new book, "Black Belt Bunny." LOVE IT! It's sweet, entertaining, fun and VERY funny. It has a relatable action hero for the kids and a healthy message that moms and dads will appreciate. The writing is streamlined and maintains momentum-- not always the case with some children's books. There is also a deftly executed shift in voice throughout, something that feels really fresh. The illustrations by Jay Fleck aren't just pretty and friendly, they actually bring to life a range of emotions for our little bunny protagonist. I think kids and parents will love this book.

Really cute book! I can't wait to read it to my nephew who is almost 3. We will have to dress his favorite bunny Rocky in a karate outfit to hear the story too.
